If you {heart} winter, this is a sparkling way to show your devotion. Splash on some spray ink (simply unscrew the nozzle, hold it over your page, and tap to create a splattered effect), sprinkle sequins, and add some pretty paper. The outcome will be a project that's as fresh as the newly fallen snow.

This card is a fantastic example of one you could make in bulk for that list of lucky card recipients this year. It uses primarily long-lasting supplies (watercolour paint, stamps, dies, and ink), so you wouldn't have to spend a bundle on materials. So crank out those snowmen and make some jolly, happy souls this year.

If a trip to the tree lot is in your future, think about unique photo ops. This trunk view of the stacked trees makes such a neat title backdrop, and it was likely an image snapped on a smart phone. Projects surrounding the holidays don't have to take a bunch of extra time (when time is at a premium!) to be outstanding. It can be as simple as seeing your holiday surroundings in an unexpected way.

Turn those lights on! All you need is a little colour blending to create illumination. Whether you use alcohol markers, sponged ink, or chalk, such blending is a gorgeous way to add soft glow behind bulbs. Another bright idea is using dimensional glaze to bring the bulbs to life. It gives a glasslike finish that twinkles.

For design that's on point, look to geometric shapes. The diamond leads the way to the photos on this love story. And the triangle on the right points right to "you" in the title, further emphasizing the subject matter. The sharp use of shapes results in a gorgeous guided tour.

Expressing love for another is something to do any season and for anyone you adore. Think about friends you cherish and children you adore. In this season that celebrates romance, it's okay to get beyond your love for your significant other and use love-themed products and prints on a page about someone who holds another special place in your heart.

Elevated photo angles aren't just the stuff of drones. Sledding is a fine time to capture a less common snapshot. As your tubers are making their way back up the hill, stand on high and get a shot. It's a cool way to capture the action.

It's the final countdown. Well, for this year at least. It's the time when people all around the world join together to count backwards from ten as they prepare to welcome the new year. Give such a grand statement major presence on your page using jumbo letters. If your resolution is to try something new with your scrapping, this technique has got your number.

Forget Monopoly and Candy Land.

The only reindeer game you'll want to join in will be paper play now that you've seen this spirited page. Yes, the sweater-inspired background is a game changer, but it's that sweet little deer across the center of the page that makes this a real winner. How can your favourite holiday tunes guide your scrapbooking tonight?

Like strips of wrapping paper, the paper borders across the center of this design bring out the photographed gifts these kiddos can't wait to tear into. It's often said that if your photos are full of colour, you should opt for a more neutral page design, but that isn't a hard rule. Have fun amplifying those holiday hues. Use products that burst with the same energy and youthful anticipation as your pics. After all, that's a big part of what makes Christmas special.
